Abstract:

A Dialectical behaviour therapy approach for post-traumatic stress disorder has been specifically designed to treat patients with complex PTSD after childhood sexual abuse. The modular program comprises trauma-specific education, anti-dissociative skills, coping with guilt, shame, disgust and self-contempt, and exposure and development of compassion for the self. Efficacy of DBT-PTSD was examined in a randomized controlled trial. Data revealed large effect sizes ($d=1.4$) and good response rates. This workshop will outline the basic therapeutic interventions for this program and how compassion interventions may be integrated into it.
